Making the Right Call: Fair, Defensible Decisions That Support Your People and Strengthen Your Workplace

Employee discipline is often treated as a compliance exercise—something to get through, document, and move on from.

But in reality, these decisions shape your workplace. They impact morale, trust, retention, and how employees experience leadership day to day. And when challenged—by a union, a hearing officer, or in court—those decisions are closely examined.

This session takes a different approach.

Rather than focusing on how to discipline employees, we focus on how to make better decisions from the start—decisions that are fair, consistent, and able to stand up to outside scrutiny.

We'll work through real-world scenarios and look at them from multiple perspectives:

- Where are the risks?
- What questions will be asked later?
- What would someone reviewing this decision see—or challenge?

The goal is not to increase discipline.

The goal is to improve it.

When handled well, discipline becomes part of a broader leadership strategy—one that supports employee growth, reinforces expectations, and contributes to a healthier, more stable workplace.

We'll Focus on:
