Addressing Rumors in the Workplace

It is no secret that people are prone to gossip. Call it boredom, insecurity or, at best, a wish to connect. But what we also know is that rumors and gossip have a corrosive impact on personal and organizational reputations and, of course, one one's happiness and well-being. Where is the line between "water-cooler" talk and reputation-smearing; what motivates rumors; who's responsibility is it to manage or quash them? This session looks at understanding the psychology and destructiveness of the rumor mill and at tips for helping avoid and manage gossip in today's workplace.
